1. Role of marketing

Q18 SIC Trial 2024 · Question 23 (a) M1a · Strategic role of marketing

2 marks

■ MARKING GUIDELINES — SIC TRIAL 2024

(a) Outline the strategic role of marketing.

Criteria	Mark
Sketches in general terms the strategic role of marketing	2
Provides some relevant information	1

Suggested answer

The strategic role of marketing is to maximise sales for an organisation through developing a group of strategies that design, price, promote and distribute the company's goods or services to obtain or maintain a sustainable competitive advantage over their competitors and achieve their objectives of sales and market share.

Q19 2019 HSC · Question 21 (b) M1b · Interdependence F1c · Interdependence

4 marks

■ MARKING GUIDELINES — 2019 HSC

Question 21 (b)

Criteria	Marks
• Clearly provides why and how marketing and finance are interdependent for this business	4
• Provides why and/or how marketing and finance are interdependent for this business	3
• Sketches in general terms how marketing and finance are interdependent for this business	2
• Provides some relevant information about marketing and/or finance	1

Sample answer:

Interdependence is the mutual reliance of one function on another in order to meet the goals of the business. For this business, finance will provide marketing with funds to undertake market research and develop a marketing plan to ensure strategies are put in place to attract customers and persuade them to buy the prestigious car. This will generate sales and therefore revenue for finance, who will be responsible for budgeting for the whole business including providing funds to marketing for the research. Together marketing and finance will ensure the business goals are achieved.

■ MARKING GUIDELINES — 2022 HSC

Question 24 (c)

Criteria	Marks
• Provides reasons why the business should adopt the marketing approach instead of the selling approach	4
• Provides a reason why the business should adopt the marketing approach instead of the selling approach	3
• Sketches in general terms the marketing approach and/or the selling approach	2
• Makes a relevant statement	1

Sample answer:

The business should adopt the marketing approach instead of the selling approach as the selling approach is focused mostly on selling due to increased competition and it often neglects the needs of the customer.

By using the marketing approach the business can find out what the customer wants and can satisfy their needs. This is usually achieved through market research and finding out customer needs and wants prior to introducing new products into a market.

📌 MODEL ANSWER

A niche market approach targets a small, clearly defined segment with specific needs rather than the whole (mass) market. By focusing on health-conscious consumers, the manufacturer can develop and promote a cereal that matches that segment's needs exactly (e.g. low sugar, high fibre, organic ingredients, clear health information on the new packaging). Because the product is differentiated and faces less direct competition than in the mass market, it can build strong brand loyalty and repeat purchases, and may even charge a premium price. This attracts new customers who were not buying the existing product, increasing sales and revenue.

2. Influences on marketing

M2a · Customer choice

3 marks

■ MARKING GUIDELINES — 2019 HSC

Question 21 (a)

Criteria	Marks
• Provides characteristics and features of ONE factor influencing customer choice for this business	3
• Sketches in general terms ONE factor influencing customer choice for this business	2
• Recognises a factor influencing customer choice for this business	1

Sample answer:

Sociocultural features include the influences exerted by peers, family and the social class of the customer. For this business, customers of a high social class would likely purchase an expensive car that has improved safety and performance aspects of the vehicle. Peers and family would also influence the choice as the customer would want to 'fit in' with their expectations. High-income earners may also be influenced by peers to purchase a high-end vehicle that is a status symbol.

Q23 2021 HSC · Question 24 (b)

M2a · Customer choice

3 marks

MODEL ANSWER

Sociocultural factors are the influences of society – culture, subculture, social class, family, reference (peer) groups – on customer choice.

The headline "Be the envy of your neighbours" appeals directly to reference groups and social status: it suggests that owning this large, stylish, premium fridge will make the customer look successful compared with the people around them, appealing to the desire to fit in with or rise above their peers and social class. The claim of "zero carbon emissions" also appeals to a growing cultural value of environmental sustainability, encouraging environmentally conscious customers to choose the product because it reflects the values of their community. Together these messages try to persuade customers to buy the fridge based on how it will make them look to others rather than on its function alone.

MODEL ANSWER

Australian consumer law (Competition and Consumer Act 2010 / Australian Consumer Law, enforced by the ACCC) prohibits deceptive and misleading advertising and sets statutory warranties/implied conditions. This advertisement may breach it in several ways:

- "This weekend only 30% off" – the fine print says "30% off not applicable to this product". Featuring the fridge next to a discount it is not eligible for is misleading (bait advertising); fine print cannot correct a false overall impression.
- "Zero carbon emissions" – only true in homes that are zero-carbon powered, so the claim is misleading/false for almost all customers.
- "The best quality fridge in the market" – an unsubstantiated claim that could mislead if it cannot be proven (it could be defended as mere puffery, but it is risky).
- "No repairs or returns will be considered after 6 months" – this attempts to exclude the consumer guarantees (implied conditions) that goods be of acceptable quality and last a reasonable time. A major appliance is expected to last well beyond six months, so customers still have rights to a repair, replacement or refund; claiming otherwise is a false representation about consumer rights.

If found in breach, the business could face ACCC action, large fines and damage to its reputation.

Q25 Abbotsleigh Trial 2023 · Question 23 (c)

■ MARKING GUIDELINES — ABBOTSLEIGH TRIAL 2023

- c) Describe ONE ethical influence of marketing of which this business should be aware.

(2 marks)

Criteria	Mark
Provides the features and characteristics of ONE ethical influence of marketing of which this business should be aware.	2 marks
Sketches in general terms the features and characteristics of ONE ethical influence of marketing of which this business should be aware.	1 mark

Suggested answer:

ONE of the following are relevant to this business:

Truth and Accuracy in Advertising - The main unethical marketing practices include untruths due to concealed facts, exaggerated claims, vague statements and invasion of privacy. Sophie's Glamour Resort must be aware of the unethical practice of concealed facts, pieces of information purposely omitted from an advertisement, as it can severely harm the trust customers have in their service or business.

Good Taste in Advertising - There is usually common agreement as to what society considers acceptable behaviour in advertising and Sophie's Glamour Camping must be aware of community sensitivities to ensure their advertisements are not offensive.

Sugging – Sugging, selling under the guise of a survey, is a sales technique disguised as market research. This technique raises ethical issues, including invasion of privacy and deception. Sugging also has long-term negative consequences for market research. The cooperation of consumers is becoming more difficult with response rates to surveys and questionnaires steadily declining.

■ MARKING GUIDELINES — ROSEVILLE TRIAL 2024

(d) The business also engages in sugging.

Why is sugging considered unethical?

Criteria	Marks
Provides a detailed cause and effect relationship between the act of sugging and why it's considered unethical	3
Provides a cause and effect relationship between the act of sugging and why it's considered unethical	2
Sketches in general terms how sugging might be considered unethical	1

Answers could include:

- Definition of sugging
- Unpacking exactly what aspects of this process are unethical (i.e. deceptive, manipulation, unsolicited nature, face to face pressure dimension, non-consensual use of private data and information, etc)

3. The marketing process

■ MARKING GUIDELINES — 2020 HSC

Question 22 (a)

Criteria	Marks
• Clearly determines the purpose of a SWOT analysis for this business	3
• Names elements of a SWOT analysis and refers to its purpose for this business	2
• Names elements of a SWOT analysis	1

Sample answer:

The purpose of the SWOT analysis for this business is to enable them to understand the current position of the business by identifying internal strengths and weaknesses. Additionally, it provides this business with information on potential opportunities and threats when entering the US market.

As part of the situational analysis, the SWOT informs the rest of the marketing process as marketing objectives and strategies can only be determined upon completion of the SWOT.

MODEL ANSWER

The cereal is most likely in the maturity–decline stage of the product life cycle. In maturity, sales growth levels off because the market is saturated and competition from existing businesses is intense; when sales start to fall, as they have for this cereal, the product is moving into decline. The manufacturer's decision to change the packaging and target health-conscious consumers is an extension strategy designed to refresh the product and push it back towards growth.

Question 21 (c)

Criteria	Marks
• Clearly shows why market research is important for this business	4
• Shows why market research is important for this business	3
• Sketches market research in general terms	2
• Provides some relevant information about market research	1

Sample answer:

Market research is the process of collecting, recording and analysing information. It is important as it allows the business to be well informed about the target market's needs and wants and allows this business to implement effective marketing strategies. High end luxury cars would attract a high price. Market research will ensure the marketing strategies are targeted at a high socioeconomic group, in an affluent area. Without accurate research it may be impossible for this business to achieve its marketing objectives of a strong position in the market and increase sales.

■ MARKING GUIDELINES — BARKER TRIAL 2023

(b) Analyse THREE steps in the marketing process required to develop a new marketing plan for this business.

Criteria	Marks
- Clearly identifies relationships between three steps in the marketing process; draws out implications of developing a new plan - Integrates stimulus	6
- Identifies relationships between three steps in the marketing process and draws out some implications - Makes use of the stimulus	5
- Clearly relates cause and effect of two steps in the marketing process - Makes some use of the stimulus	4
- Provides characteristics and features of two steps in the marketing process - Makes some use of the stimulus	3
- Provides characteristics and features of one step in the marketing process - Makes reference to the stimulus	2
- Makes an accurate statement regarding the marketing process - May or may not make reference to the stimulus	1
No valid response	0

Marker's comments:

Stronger responses clearly defined three consecutive steps and provided relevant examples regarding the stimulus. For example, the business should conduct a situational analysis, conduct market research and then develop revised marketing strategies. This could include noting that the economic downturn presents a threat to the business and may require adjustments to their pricing strategies at Spook.

■ MARKING GUIDELINES — BARKER TRIAL 2024

(c) Why is identifying a target market important when developing a product?

Criteria	Marks
Clearly demonstrates why identifying a target market is important when developing a product	4
Provides some reasoning why identifying a target market is important and links to product	3
Sketches in general terms the importance of identifying a target market	2
Identifies aspects of identifying a target market	1

Sample answer:

Identifying a target market is a vital step in the marketing process when developing a product as the business can tailor the product features to meet the specific needs and preferences of the designated target customers. The business can also more easily differentiate their product from competitors and implement effective marketing strategies such as branding, packaging and positioning that will appeal to the target market.

- d) Explain how determining the target market of Sophie's Glamping Resort would assist the business to determine appropriate marketing strategies. (5 marks)

Criteria	Mark
Relates thoroughly cause and effect; makes the relationships between concepts clear as to how determining the target market of Sophie's Glamping Resort would assist the business to determine appropriate marketing strategies	5 marks
Relates cause and effect; refers to the relationships between concepts as to how determining the target market of Sophie's Glamping Resort would assist the business to determine appropriate marketing strategies	4 marks
Describes how determining the target market of Sophie's Glamping Resort would assist the business to determine marketing strategies	3 marks
Outlines how determining the target market of Sophie's Glamping Resort would assist the business to determine marketing strategies	2 marks
Refers to the target market of Sophie's Glamping Resort	1 mark

Suggested answer:

A target market is a group of present and potential customers to which a business intends to sell its product. Determining the common psychological, behavioural, geographical and demographic characteristics of the target market will enable Sophie's Glamour Resort direct its marketing strategies effectively to that group of customers, enabling the business to satisfy the wants and needs of the targeted group. This occurs because having determined the target market, Sophie's Glamping Resort would be able to use its marketing resources more efficiently, which is likely to result in the marketing strategies being more cost effective and time efficient; make promotion strategies more relevant to the customers' needs, and therefore more produce more sales, better understand the consumer buying behaviour of the target market to enable to business to develop more effective marketing strategies and collect data more effectively and enable Sophie's Glamour resort to refine the marketing strategies used to influence customer choice.

Question 24 (b)

Criteria	Marks
• Demonstrates a clear understanding of the way the business will know the marketing plan has been successful	3
• Demonstrates an understanding of the way the business will know the marketing plan has been successful	2
• Makes a relevant statement about the marketing plan	1

Sample answer:

In the marketing plan, the business would have developed a financial forecast that included the cost and potential sales of the new product range. The business could monitor and control the marketing plan, comparing actual with planned results in terms of sales and market share to determine the success of their new product range.

- c) Assess the importance of market segmentation in the development of effective marketing strategies for this business. (5 marks)

Marking Criteria	Mark
Makes a thorough judgement of value, quality, outcomes, results or size, of market segmentation in the development of effective marketing strategies for Exclusive Gardens Pty Ltd	5
Makes some judgement of value, quality, outcomes, results or size, of market segmentation in the development of effective marketing strategies for Exclusive Gardens Pty Ltd	4
Relates the cause/effect relationship between market segmentation and the development of effective marketing strategies for Exclusive Gardens Pty Ltd	3
Describes market segmentation and the development of marketing strategies for Exclusive Gardens Pty Ltd	2
Sketches in general terms market segmentation and/or marketing strategies for Exclusive Gardens Pty Ltd	1

Suggested response:

Market segmentation involves dividing the total market into groups of people who share one or more common characteristics. Once the market has been segmented, the marketing manager selects one of these segments to become the target market. Market segmentation is of significant importance to Exclusive Gardens Pty Ltd as the business is able to identify the specific demographic, geographic, behavioural and psychographic characteristics of their target market. EG can then develop marketing strategies including price, product and promotion to effectively meet the specific requirements their target market; that is, professionals of high socioeconomic status who love gardening and reside in country estates throughout Australia. These marketing strategies are fundamental to the business's attainment of their key marketing objectives of increasing sales, market share and profit.

MODEL ANSWER

Government regulation sets rules that products must meet, so it directly shapes Trendy Masks' product strategy (product features, quality, packaging and labelling).

- Product standards and safety – face masks sold as personal protective equipment may have to meet Australian standards and TGA requirements for filtration and safety. Trendy Masks must design and test its products to comply, which increases costs and may limit design choices (e.g. materials used in "stylish" masks).
- Labelling and claims – under the Australian Consumer Law it cannot make false or misleading claims (e.g. claiming a fashion mask "protects against viruses" without evidence). Packaging and labels must accurately describe the product and include required information.
- Consumer guarantees – products must be of acceptable quality and fit for purpose, so poor-quality masks would have to be repaired, replaced or refunded.

Complying with regulation increases costs and time to market, but it builds consumer trust in the brand and avoids fines, recalls and reputational damage.

Question 22 (b)

Criteria	Marks
• Clearly provides reasons for adopting a particular pricing method	3
• Provides characteristics and features of a pricing method or pricing strategy	2
• Names a pricing method or pricing strategy	1

Sample answer:

Competition based pricing could be an effective pricing method for this business in the US market. This pricing method covers materials and operations costs and is comparable with the competitor's price based on the following pricing options:

- Below that of competitors to undercut the competition to establish themselves in the market.
- Equal to competitor's price which saves money on researching how much consumers would pay for guitars.
- Above that of competitors to create a perception of superiority.

■ MARKING GUIDELINES — ROSEVILLE TRIAL 2023

23 (b) Identify the stage of the product life cycle that this product is in and justify how this relates to the pricing strategy that is being used by this business.

Criteria	Mark

Correctly identifies the stage of the product life cycle as “introduction” and puts forth an argument as to why the price skimming strategy is appropriate based on this stage.	3
Correctly identifies the stage of the product life cycle as “introduction” and sketches in a general terms a relevant pricing strategy	2
Correctly identifies the stage of the product life cycle as “introduction” or makes a relevant statement about pricing strategies	1

Answers may include:

marketing process

- situational analysis – SWOT, product life cycle
- pricing strategies – skimming, penetration, loss leaders, price points

The product life cycle (PLC) identifies the stages a product passes through: introduction, growth, maturity and decline and then helps marketers develop marketing strategies that are appropriate based on which stage of the PLC that the product occupies. The EZ Sleep blanket is in the introductory stage and has a large amount of celebrity endorsement, which allows them to pursue a price skimming pricing strategy whereby early adopters who are very enthusiastic about the product pay a very high price to get access to it. Over time, once these customers have been exhausted, the price skimming strategy will see the price fall to a lower pricing point, which then works to attract the next group of customers that are unprepared to pay $4,000 for the blanket, but would buy it at a lower price.

Gives reasons for AND against TWO suitable channel choices for this business	4
Gives a reason for AND against TWO channel choices for this business	3
Gives a reason for AND against ONE channel choices for this business	2
Provides relevant information	1

Suggested answer

Channel choice refers to the route to market a business takes, and the specific retail outlets consumers can purchase products. Exclusive channels are suitable as the athletic wear is premium, therefore, to maintain the brand positioning they should partner with only a few exclusive outlets to increase desirability and justify premium prices. On the other hand, this may not help the brand meet their sales objective and raise awareness amongst consumers as there isn't a wide enough distribution.

Another suitable choice would be selective, this is where a few specific outlets are chosen to sell the new product range. For example, partnering with a sports outlet in the US they can generate specials and a promotional campaign such as "only available at". However, selective may not be suitable as this could harm the premium nature of the new product line. Additionally, only using a few select retailers may lead to less sales due to lower footfall.

Marker's Feedback: intensive is not deemed "suitable" for this business. A clear reason for and against was required for both channel choice.

Question 22 (c)

Criteria	Marks
• Provides a clear and supported argument for the use of a standardised marketing strategy by this business	4
• Provides an argument for the use of a standardised marketing strategy this business	3
• Sketches in general terms a standardised marketing strategy	2
• Makes a relevant statement about a standardised marketing strategy	1

Sample answer:

Using a standardised marketing strategy this business can increase its success when entering the global market. It can achieve economies of scale which achieve lower per unit input costs. This strategy paired with standardised marketing can save the business money when taking spare parts, repairs and after-sales service into account. Customers also benefit from this strategy as they can expect consistency throughout the world and product features remain the same regardless of where the product is purchased. Finally, the business will achieve cost savings as the one marketing approach will be adopted worldwide and does not need to be customised for the needs of individual markets.

🔍 MODEL ANSWER

The most appropriate global marketing strategy is customisation, where the business adapts its product and marketing mix to suit the tastes, culture, laws and needs of each overseas market (as opposed to standardisation, which sells the same product everywhere).

Justification: - Food tastes differ widely between countries – breakfast habits, preferred flavours, sweetness levels and portion sizes vary, so a cereal designed for Australian consumers may not appeal overseas. Adapting the recipe and flavours to local preferences will increase acceptance and sales. - Local laws and regulations – food labelling, nutritional information, ingredient and health-claim regulations differ between countries. Customising the packaging (language, nutrition panels, health claims) ensures legal compliance and avoids fines or product withdrawal. - Cultural and religious requirements – some markets require halal or kosher certification or avoid certain ingredients; customising builds trust and avoids offence. - Competitive positioning – customised packaging and promotion can position the cereal as a healthy, premium product that meets the needs of health-conscious consumers in each market, differentiating it from local competitors.

Although customisation costs more than standardisation (market research, product development and separate promotional campaigns), it gives the manufacturer the best chance of building market share and brand loyalty in new global markets, so the higher revenue should outweigh the extra costs. It also supports global branding, because the core brand name and logo can remain the same while the product is tailored locally.
